

Home > In defence of rational AIDS activism: How the irrationality of Act Up Paris and others is risking the health of people with HIV

In defence of rational AIDS activism: How the irrationality of Act Up Paris and others is risking the health of people with HIV

By moderator

Created 2008/07/24 - 5:15pm

24 July, 2008 - 17:15 ? moderator

AP / Jacques Brinon

TAC Treasurer Nathan Geffen and ARASA's former Regional Treatment Literacy

Coordinator Gregg Gonsalves have recently co-authored an article describing the irrational actions of Act Up-Paris and some other organisations in recent years. Geffen and Gonsalves argue that the irrationality of these groups threatens the development of new treatment and prevention technologies for people with HIV and undermines scientific research programmes in developing countries.

You can download a copy of the article here.

The article was recently published in the Autumn issue of the Journal of the Southern African HIV Clinicians Society. Please note that there might be slight editing differences between the version of the article available here and the published edition.

- Treatment Literacy

- Treatment Literacy